Brenham woman indicted on assault charge

A Texas woman is accused of shooting a man at her home.

According to the Washington County Sheriff’s Office, the woman, identified as Jessica O’Keefe, 34, of Brenham, is charged with the first-degree felony of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon.

O’Keefe is accused of shooting a man, identified as John Hickman, 33, of Brenham, with a .357-magnum revolver.

O’Keefe was arrested on May 28, 2015, and is being held at the Washington County Jail on a $60,000 bond.

What issues roll Washington?

Obama’s veto threats are clues on what issues roil Washington?

The White House, and even the pique between the president and GOP congressional leaders.

The veto threats that he’s issued over the last three weeks are a microcosm of American politics.

The Supreme Court has agreed to hear a case; ruling unlikely during legislative session

According to the AAA Texas Weekend Gas Price Report, Texas, drivers in Corpus Christi are paying the least at $1.74 per gallon.

Drivers in Texas are paying 20 cents less per gallon that the national average of $2.94. The average price at the pump is directly connected to the global price of crude oil, with crude prices accounting for more than half of the price of gasoline.

The price of crude oil has also posted multiday losses due to global supply concerns stemming from the war in Iraq, which has kept down crude prices.

In addition to delivering eight formal veto threats over the past six years, has been tossing out vetoes like confetti since Republicans took full control of Congress.

That means a ruling won’t come during legislative session.

Both sides then have 40 days to file briefs, if the Supreme Court even hears the case. That means a ruling won’t come during legislative session.

Study: Majority of young adults prefer egalitarian relationships

Austin — The majority of young women and men today would prefer an egalitarian relationship in which work and family responsibilities are shared equally between partners if that possibility were available to them, according to a new study from the University of Texas at Austin (UT-Austin) Department of Sociology and a faculty research area on role stress and gender equality.

The study was conducted in the February issue of the American Sociological Review, a leading journal for sociologists and social researchers in the United States, the researchers asked a nationally representative sample of unmarried, children men and women between the ages of 18 and 32 in the United States, the researchers asked respondents how they would prefer to structure their relationship in a future spouse or partner in terms of work and family life.

The findings also shed light on the factors contributing to gender inequality and the ways in which government and organizational policies could be redesigned to improve the lives of young men and women. The study provides compelling evidence that if policies such as the Family and Medical Leave Act, subsidized child care were universally in place, women would be more likely to want an egalitarian relationship with their partner and much less likely to want to be the primary home-maker or caregiver.

The findings from this study also contribute new insights into the context of recent public debates about whether women should “lean in” and whether they can “have it all.” A key implication of this research is that men and women’s current work-family arrangements are often stifled and result from a particular set of unproductive workplace policies and practices.

This could mean that if we were to change the workplace policies, it would not significantly change how people express their ideal preferences for balancing work and family life.

Satire and political cartoons can be an incredibly powerful tool, offering a platform to criticize policies or practices. In fact, we probably need to see a major cultural shift to more effectively support the institutions where freedom of speech is an absolute guarantee. I remain hopeful that others will view the issue differently and consider the potential benefits that can come from more open discourse.

I am not saying we should never critique unfair behavior. Yet here, when journalists pick and poke at religious practice, much like saying you don't have indoor plumbing. How can they and “prove” that their views are correct? It's a good point.

The one constant has been a belief in freedom. “We train educators about it so that they can discriminate between good and bad behavior. Yet here, when journalists pick and poke at religious practice, much like saying you don't have indoor plumbing. How can they and “prove” that their views are correct? It's a good point.

Facebook friend or foe? I have been guided by a simple philosophy. It was adopted on Dec. 15, 1791, as one of the 10 amendments that comprise the Bill of Rights. "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

However, another way of looking at the issue is that Facebook as a social networking platform is a tool for communication. It is a tool that can help us connect and engage with others. This is why I enjoy using Facebook to share news articles, updates about friends and family, and even to rant about things that annoy me.

There are things about Facebook that I enjoy. I get to see my friends' updates, which can be fun. I also enjoy seeing what my friends are up to and seeing their posts. I like the variety of content that Facebook offers. However, there are also things that I don't like about Facebook. The worst offenders are the people who post inappropriate content, such as images that are too explicit or violent.

There's nothing wrong with having a lot of friends on Facebook. However, there are limits to what is appropriate. I don't think it's acceptable to post images that are too explicit or offensive. I also think it's important to respect others' privacy and not to post things about them without their permission.

The worst offenders are the people who post inappropriate content, such as images that are too explicit or violent. I think it's important to respect others' privacy and not to post things about them without their permission. I would encourage everyone to be more careful when using Facebook.

Blinn names 10 students to Don Wilhelm Athletic Director’s Honor Roll
Nine student-athletes earn a 4.0 grade point average

Steff Report
Blinn College has named 10 student-athletes to the Fall 2014 Don Wilhelm Athletic Director’s Honor Roll.

Nine student-athletes earned a 4.0 grade point average. Volleyball player Whitney Landers, cheerleader Carley Scott Domingo, basketball player Taylor Johnson, soccer player Grace Jorgenson, baseball player Austin Scott, softball player Rebecca Proske and Rebecca Noak, tennis player Karina Unger, baseball player Allen Dauphin and volleyball player Rachel Judes were named to the honor roll.

Kathleen Andrus and Avery Stilwell were named the Blinn College athletic director’s student athlete of the year. “I am proud of the time and effort the student athletes put into their academics,” said Tammy Klinger, Blinn College athletic director.

The football team (8-2-0) had nine players recognized (enrollment 18 sports and football 13). The honor roll is named after former Blinn director of athletics Don Wilhelm.
